

While looking for sources for your assignment, please analyze each source by asking yourself the following CAPPS Evaluation questions:

Title/ Source Name
Website, Database or Book? (If database, which one?)
CURRENCY: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> When was this source created? If you can't find the date, how recent is the information the author uses to support their argument? Is that current enough for your topic?
Author: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Who is responsible for creating this source? Are they an expert on this topic? How do you know? What are the author's credentials/background in this area? Has the author written other things on this same topic?
Publisher: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Who is responsible for publishing this source? Is the publisher's mission to inform, entertain, or persuade the reader? How do you know?
Point of View: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> What is the purpose of the source (inform, entertain, or persuade)? Does the author provide multiple points of view (both sides of the argument)? Is this source scholarly or popular? Is the information mostly fact or opinion? Is the information supported by research? Is the language difficult to understand? Is the author using very technical or subject specific terminology? Does the author use emotional or opinionated language? (Remember, don't just think about what the text says, but how it says it) Who is the intended audience for this source?
Sources: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> What evidence is provided for the claims that the author makes? Can you determine where the author got their information? Are outside sources cited in references, footnotes, or in the text? If so, are they from trustworthy publications?

While looking for sources for your assignment, please analyze each source by asking yourself the following CAPPS Evaluation questions:

Title/ Source Name
Website, Database or Book? (If database, which one?)
CURRENCY: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • When was this source created? If you can't find the date, how recent is the information the author uses to support their argument? • Is that current enough for your topic?
Author: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Who is responsible for creating this source? • Are they an expert on this topic? • How do you know? • What are the author's credentials/background in this area? • Has the author written other things on this same topic?
Publisher: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Who is responsible for publishing this source? • Is the publisher's mission to inform, entertain, or persuade the reader? How do you know?
Point of View: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • What is the purpose of the source (inform, entertain, or persuade)? • Does the author provide multiple points of view (both sides of the argument)? • Is this source scholarly or popular? • Is the information mostly fact or opinion? • Is the information supported by research? • Is the language difficult to understand? Is the author using very technical or subject specific terminology? • Does the author use emotional or opinionated language? (Remember, don't just think about what the text says, but how it says it) • Who is the intended audience for this source?
Sources: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • What evidence is provided for the claims that the author makes? • Can you determine where the author got their information? • Are outside sources cited in references, footnotes, or in the text? If so, are they from trustworthy publications? 	